LANGHORNE MAN IS KILLED AS HIS CAR CRASHES INTO TRUCK

Murray Andrews, 38, Dies of Fractured Skull and Broken Neck

TRUCK WAS PARKED
Officers Report Five Red Lights Burned On The Rear of Vehicle

A Langhorne man met his death last night when his car is said to have crashed into the rear of a parked truck at Morrisville.

The victim: Murray Andrews, 38, R. D. 2, Langhorne.

Murray was pronounced dead at St. Francis Hospital, Trenton, N. J., to which institution he was rushed. The deputy county physician who examined the body at Trenton, stated that death was due to a fractured skull and broken neck.

The truck into which the car operated by Murray crashed, was parked on West Bridge street, near Harding avenue, Morrisville. The driver of the truck, Arthur Brown, colored, of Philadelphia, informed officers he had parked the truck and trailer along the curb and climbed out to wipe off the windshield. He added that he had just re-entered the truck when the sedan driven by Andrews crashed into the rear with terrific force. The car was owned by Evelyn Andrews, a relative of the victim, who resides in Upper Darby.

Police reported that five red lights were burning on the rear of the truck at the time of the crash. The driver is employed by the Pioneer Paper Stock Company, Philadelphia.

Officer Joseph Lebergern, of Morrisville police force, investigated, and Brown will be arraigned today before Neal Nolan, justice of the peace, on a charge of involuntary manslaughter.

Tug Settles In River After Ramming Ice Floe

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 10.—(INS)—Seven members of the 90-foot, sea-going tug Triton—which rammed an ice floe and settled in the Delaware River—were safe on shore today after a dramatic rescue in icy darkness that covered the ice-clogged scene.

Four of the men, in imminent peril of death, were taken from two ice cakes on which they managed to stay afloat more than three hours, while the remaining three were saved after clinging to the superstructure of the damaged tug.

Returning from Trenton, N. J., the powerful tug suddenly struck the huge ice cake off the Holmesburg section of this city. As water rushed into the boiler compartment through a gaping hole, the men leaped to the ice, fearful the vessel would explode. Three climbed back to the ship when the explosion failed to materialize and the boat came to rest on a sand bar. The others, however, were forced to ride their precarious rafts until they drifted into a jam and held.

With police, spectators and volunteers powerless to aid from either the New Jersey or Pennsylvania shores, the city fireboat Rudolph Blankenburg and the police boat John Wanamaker went to the rescue.

Those saved from the ice are: Earl Mitchell, 42, of 5163 Rensselaer street, mate.

Clarence Cooper, 51, of 5506 Whitby avenue, deckhand.

Clarence Murray, 33, of 6229 Haverford road, fireman.

William Sparks, 22, of 5527 Greenway street, fireman.

Rescued from the tug were: Captain McGee, 37, of 5594 Delancey street.

John Benussi, 33, of 2643 Tulip street, cook.

Frank Derrickson, 51, 5409 Delancey street, chief engineer.

Condition of Bristolian, Hurt in Crash, Dangerous

Condition of Miss Rita Angelina, 24, of Trenton avenue, who was injured in an automobile accident at South Langhorne, Thursday night, is pronounced still dangerous by officials at Mercer Hospital. Hospital attaches stated, however, there was a slight improvement this morning. Miss Angelina has a fracture of the skull.

She was injured when a car said to be operated by Francis J. Kehoe, Grant avenue, Torresdale, crashed into a pole on Durham Road. Kehoe died at 6.30 yesterday morning in Mercer Hospital, and a third passenger, Anthony DiNunzio, 32, Bristol, was given treatment for cuts of the face.

The funeral of Kehoe will be held on Monday at 8.30 from the home of his father, Patrick Kehoe, Grant avenue, Torresdale, with Solemn Requiem Mass in St. Katherine's Church, Torresdale, at 10 o'clock, and interment in St. Mark's Cemetery, here. Friends may call Sunday evening. Kehoe was an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad in its Trenton office. He was a brother of Mrs. Joseph Cahill, Bath street.

Burned at Fuse Plant

Norman Dransfield, Croydon, suffered second degree burns of both forearms, face, neck and head in a fire at noon today at the Samuel Jackson Sons Co. plant, South Bristol.

Dransfield was burned in a blaze which for a time threatened to spread from the building in which it occurred.

Tornado Hits Georgia

Albany, Ga., Feb. 10.—Scores were feared killed and hundreds injured today as one of the most devastating tornadoes in the history of Southern Georgia ripped through Albany, laying waste large sections of the town.

Broken communication lines and debris filled buildings and streets, making it impossible to obtain any reliable estimate of the dead and injured, but one hospital alone reported it had given treatment to more than 200 persons. The injured were being placed on the floors of hospital rooms and in the corridors.

A number of bodies were found in the wrecked buildings, but no attempt was being made for immediate identification. Efforts instead were concentrated on the gigantic task of providing relief and medical attention for the injured.

The storm struck shortly after 4 a. m., and lasted but a few moments, but it left a wide path of destruction through the city and in the business district.

Confronted with the greatest disaster in the history of the city, officials called upon Governor E. D. Rivers, the state highway patrol and the American Red Cross for aid.

The Governor immediately dispatched National Guardsmen to the scene. Then, accompanied by an escort of highway patrolmen, the Governor left Atlanta for the scene to take personal charge of the situation.

MORRISVILLE WOMAN, 95, DOESN'T WANT TO BE 100

Mrs. Elizabeth Moon in Excellent Health; Has Fine Sight and Hearing

LIKES RADIO 'SKITS

MORRISVILLE, Feb. 10.—Mrs. Elizabeth Moon, 28 East Palmer street, is now in her 95th year but she says she just "doesn't want to reach 100."

Born in Fallington, in 1846, the daughter of William and Louisa Lovett, Mrs. Moon has lived here since her marriage to Frank Moon when she was 17 years old. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Philip Hawk here, near the present Pennsylvania Railroad station, Mr. Moon died several years ago, at the age of 82. He was a mason by trade and in his later years was sexton of the Morrisville Cemetery.

In Fallington, she attended the grammar schools, as no higher schools were available at the time. She recalls the days when Morrisville was a small hamlet and has seen many changes in the town. The blizzard of 1888 was "some snow," and one could go over fences with sleds, so deep was it, she said.

For entertainment, Mrs. Moon enjoys the skits on the radio because "they make you laugh once in awhile." The new conveniences are very nice, she says, and especially the electric cleaner and electric washer. Crocheting occupies much of her time, along with her knitting and mending.

Mrs. Moon has six children, including Elwood, William, Henry, Anna, Carrie and Lillian, now Mrs. J. E. Godwin. She resides with Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin at the Palmer street address. All the other children are deceased.

There are 18 grandchildren, 24 great-grandchildren and 2 great-great-grandchildren.

Although she doesn't care to reach 100, Mrs. Moon is in good physical condition to do so. She has excellent hearing and eyesight.

BEGINNING OF LENT

Wednesday marked the beginning of the solemn, penitential season of the Christian year. Commemoration of Christ's forty days and forty nights of fasting in the wilderness is a religious observance which, throughout the history of the Christian church, has been deemed necessary to spiritual self-discipline. The practice of observing Lent, furthermore, is one that commands itself, philosophically and psychologically, to all thoughtful persons, regardless of religious belief.

Whether you think and talk in terms of the human soul or in terms of the human mind—if you must or can differentiate between the two—you must acknowledge that it is well for man to set aside a season for withdrawal from some aspects of this world which are too much with us. Self-denial, honest and unsparring self-analysis, contemplation of one's own shortcomings and strengthening of resolution to mend the faults revealed—all these are necessary to building the individual character and to preserving it against deterioration.

The first essential of honesty is that one be honest with oneself. Most self-deception is not deliberate and studied. It usually results from man's reluctance to look fearlessly into his own character and to face frankly what he sees there. The one person whom the average man is likely to avoid most assiduously during most of the year is his real self. That is one reason why man is so gregarious and seeks diversions and contacts which relieve him from contemplation and introspection. It is well, perhaps, that man follows the impulse to get away from himself through much of the year. It would be neither wise nor desirable to devote too much time to self-examination.

But it is both wise and desirable—and spiritually and mentally revivifying—to set aside at least a little of one's allotted time to take a look of oneself and to take thought of how to make that self a better and more useful part of the whole scheme of life. Lent offers the traditional season for this opportunity.

BETTER BIOGRAPHIES

This year of 1940 is being marked for celebration in occidental countries as the five hundredth anniversary of Gutenberg, who introduced printing.

Possibly Gutenberg did not invent printing from movable type—the Chinese claim to have had a centuries before him and probably did. But Gutenberg put printing on the map in the western part of the world. Among other things he made possible, quite apart from the benediction he conferred on humanity by making all literature accessible, the biography of the obscure.

Nearly everybody today knows America has somewhere a printer, a record of himself with notice, wedding notice, funeral notice. This Gutenberg through printing provided the means of knowing in the future something about everybody.

Before printing was utilized with its present universality a man could be great and still go on unrecorded. The biographical meagerness of Christopher Columbus is proof of that; and of Shakespeare; and of Gutenberg, of whom actually little is known.

Most metropolitan newspapers still print news on the front page devoting only the rest of the page to the output of columnists.

"SELF MADE GIRL" by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XXII

"Oh, King—I'm tired that's all—and it's hot. It's worse than ever in here. Come on—let's get out. I want to go home."

He paid for the milk-shakes, taking the coins out of a small purse he kept in a back pocket. On the street he took her arm again.

"Now look here, Linda, I'm not trying to rush you off your feet. But if I'm willing to go into it knowing . . . a . . . knowing you're still a little upset, I think you ought to appreciate it and meet me half way. It's what we both need. Be modern, my dear. Recognize what ails you and—"

"What are you TALKING about?" "What am I talking about? My God, Linda what are YOU talking about?"

"I don't know. I swear I don't know. I dare say I'm a little crazy, what with the heat and everything. Don't stand and stare at me with your mouth open! Whatever I said, I didn't mean it. I didn't mean anything. Oh, come on, King!—I want to go HOME!"

They walked on silently, their footsteps echoing on the quiet street. Almost at her door he spoke again. "So you lost your nerve."

"I tell you I don't know what you're talking about. You might as well start in again, from the beginning."

"After all, I'm giving up something too," he told her. "I have my mother, and I don't like to leave her, and there's nobody to care what you do, your parents are dead!"

He was quite right. There was no one to care what she did. The only ones who ever did, were dead, or married, or getting married. . . . "It's awful to be alone!" she cried, suddenly afraid of it—of herself, of everything—

"I know. That's why I thought we could fix something up together. You and I. Will you, Linda? Of course I know you don't care about me, especially, except as a friend, but I know I could make you care. How about giving it a try?"

She looked up into his face. She saw what he meant. He loved her, and he was asking her to marry him. Right here, right in this spot where she'd stood saying goodnight to Glenn . . . to Glenn, who hadn't asked her. . . .

Tears started to her eyes. She put her hands up to shield her face, and dropped her bag, and a scarf and her gloves. He got down on his knees to pick them up, and then he handed them to her, one by one.

First George, back home when she was eighteen, and now King. . . . They both wanted her. And the only person she ever wanted . . . the only person she would ever want, she could never, never have. "Thanks, King. You're nice. Too nice to me. But it wouldn't work." Her voice was thick with the tears that she could no longer control. She took his hand, and squeezed it, trying to smile.

The elevator man watched, and so did the girl at the desk. King pulled himself together. "I'll be seeing you at Tanya's just the same," he said as jauntily as he could. "I'm not going to stay away. And I don't want you to stay away either. Promise you won't stay away on my account."

"I promise," she said. She was crying now. Right in the hall, for everyone to see. And she knew that she'd never go back—never.

The next year, the year that Linda was 22, was the one in which the family was most proud of her, and she was most disgusted with herself. There was no sweetness left in her, she thought. No faith or hope, or even honest friendliness. She was a girl possessed. With but one thought, to get ahead.

After facing the old crowd at Tanya's, and turning down poor King's stumbling proposal on that night she lost Glenn, she could never bring herself to go back to them. They represented something that was lost with her love. Youth and gaiety and innocence. Something to which she couldn't turn back.

Instead, she turned to Hester again, and Hester was willing to let bygones be bygones. "I told you, hon," she said, "but I knew at the time I was wasting my breath. We have to find out these things for ourselves. Well, now that you've decided not to be a sap any more, let's go!"

By the end of winter, Linda could look back and smile at the little whirl Glenn had given her. She knew all the night clubs, all the bands, all the best places to eat and drink. Half a dozen gardenias no longer took her breath away. The "common" purple orchid she considered decidedly unimaginative. Like Hester, she preferred the unusual—pure white, palest pink, brown. Taxis everywhere she took as a matter of course. It was the least a man could do, if he didn't have his own car and driver.

Lots of them did have their own, large, dark cars, with liveried drivers. Lots of them had wives and children, too, but as Hester said, "It's really none of our business."

The only things she missed were the plays, the concerts, the operas that she used to enjoy so much from the gallery. She'd gladly have sat in the gallery now, but none of her new friends had any use for the serious drama, and they liked their music in swing time, with girls.

"When I go to a show," said Lou Hermann, who came in from Sioux City three times a year to get a pep talk from the home office, "I want to forget my troubles! I want to laugh. How about that new one opening up on Broadway, with all those posters all over town? That ought to be a hot one!"

So, with Lou Hermann and all the others, who came from other places, she went to "the hot ones." After all, the Lou Hermanns paid. They paid for dinner and flowers and "two in the fifth row center, on the aisle," and they didn't get much for their money.

To do them credit, most of them didn't ask much. Just a pretty, strikingly dressed girl to go along and make them feel young and gay again, and help them forget the wife and kid in Sioux City or Houston or Deluth.

Hester seldom wasted her time on these out-of-town visitors with money burning their pockets. She didn't care for the gaiety, the chance to see and be seen, that satisfied Linda. She merely filled in, from her long list of out-of-town prospects, when she wasn't occupied with a more serious affair.

"I'm really an incurable optimist," she told Linda, her smile a little twisted, "I know better, but I keep thinking—maybe this is the one. Maybe this is going to be different. Maybe I'm really in love this time!" Of course, I never am, and it's never different. It's always the same. But it's fun, while it lasts. Better than galloping all over town the way you do, girl—guiding the rubes."

"Maybe you're right," Linda said. "Maybe I'm a fool to go out every night. I'm going to try staying home for a while, and cultivate my mind."

But she knew that she wouldn't do that. That would mean she'd have time to think about Glenn and that would mean tears again, and remembrance.

She was a whirlwind of energy, a demon for work as well as play. Night after night, she came home in the small hours, only to have her breakfast sent up to her at quarter to 8, to bathe and dress, and be on her way to the office at quarter to 9. No longer was she forgetful, unattractive, dreaming. She was, Mr. Bottinger was beginning to think, almost too business-like.

Because, he thought, she worked too hard, he had Mrs. Bottinger invite her sometimes to Sunday dinner in their old-fashioned comfortable house, wedged between two new, ultra-modern apartments, and then they all sat around, glowing with kindness, being nice to "papa's little secretary."

Twice they took her driving into the country, and once for a day at Atlantic City. Strangely enough, Linda enjoyed the long, rather dull days she spent with them. They satisfied an inner craving for something she found nowhere else.

After all his kindness to her, Mr. Bottinger was shocked, absolutely unprepared, when Linda came to him one morning and told him that she wanted to leave.

He had known, for months, that the general manager envied him his capable young assistant. He had, on more than one occasion seen him talking to her in the hall. He rather suspected that the matter would be brought up, but not for a minute did he think that Linda would leave him willingly.

"What did Mr. Denning say to you?" he asked her sternly. "He said that he wanted another secretary and he wanted to know if I'd like the opportunity. Then he said he'd speak to you about it and see if you were willing. But you've been so kind to me, I wanted to tell you first, myself."

Mr. Bottinger took off his glasses and polished them carefully with a pink cloth he kept in the case. "This is very irregular," he said at length. "It puts me in an—an embarrassing position."

Linda waited and he went on. "I regret exceedingly the necessity of speaking of this at all. I feel, however, that it is only fair to warn you that Mr. Denning is a most difficult man to work for. A most difficult man."

"I expect difficulties, as I go up the ladder."

"Up the ladder!" Mr. Bottinger spluttered. As a gentleman of the old school and as a member of the firm, he could hardly discuss the sort of difficulties the general manager would present to a young, unmarried employee.

Linda didn't help him. She said nothing.

"It will be very unpleasant for you, my dear girl. Very unpleasant. This—this Mrs. Breen—You will find her most unpleasant. She neither needs help, nor desires it. I am afraid it will be—ah!—most unpleasant for you."

"Nevertheless," Linda said, "it's a chance and I'm willing to take it. That is, if you're willing to let me." She knew he couldn't stop her, but she'd let him think she didn't know it. She'd let him think she didn't know a lot of things.

The duel between herself and Mrs. Breen lasted just three weeks. Nothing was said, apparently nothing was done, but each for the strain cruelly. At

Blames Adult Generation
For Youth Problems

The insidiousness of certain types of advertising, where "smart-looking people" who appear to be the life of the party, are pictured with the beverages advertised, was derided. "Such is under constant observation of our young people, and they are given the wrong ideas. They come to feel that drinking is the smart thing to do, and that it is done by the 'best people' and they get a wrong attitude toward life." The changing times, with forces affecting youth today that did not affect those of a generation ago, were deeply considered. The great amount of time spent in the movies was spoken of. "And in nearly every film there is brought a drinking scene, either a fine chromium bar in a swanky place, or a cocktail shaker at a small gathering. Year in and year out they see these things, and naturally youth is getting to thing it is the proper thing to do. And so we find thousands upon thousands of young women and young men throughout the country sitting in little tap-rooms while two or three brass instruments insult the human ear."

In taking up the matter of motion pictures at greater length, the school principal showed how the girls and boys see film heroes succeeding by so-called successful marriages. "They are constantly seeing the film youth succeed, and not by hard work. Combine this with the government forces, and they think if they are at the right place at the right time, they will be 'sitting pretty.' Then disillusionment comes." He told that good readers are few among the young people today, because there is so much else permitted to occupy their time. "In times past there was no radio, no movies. We read. The homes taught the children to read for pleasure and information. But now cultural reading is out of their lives. The school only has the child five hours a day for several subjects, and yet the school is oftentimes blamed if the pupils cannot read well. The truth is the home is not doing its part. The home permits forces to bear down on these children that are shaping them in the wrong way. . . . When we have a problem child come before us, I know where the fault is—in the home. And there are problem children in the homes of the wealthy as in the homes of the poor. The children are not given what they need in life." It was then brought to mind that thousands are taught Latin, French, German, algebra, geometry, and other such studies, who do not want them, who can't master them, and who won't use them. "Shops are needed in our schools. The only reason we teach these subjects to all students is because way back those subject were taught for the benefit of the young men who were to become ministers or idlers. And we haven't changed our courses of study as we should to meet a changing world." Then he said: "I'm not criticizing the public schools, but asking for justice. You see the young people of today are being fitted for the life they cannot have."

"Whose children are they? The American people's children," he reminded as he asked that lack of respect for authority be checked, and that the idealism that is America's be brought back.

During the course of the business meeting, with Mrs. William DuHamel occupying the chair, Mrs. Harry Neher read the minutes in the absence of Mrs. Russell DeLong, secretary. Mrs. Albert Dowden was the accompanist for group singing. Announcements by the president were to the effect that a consumers' conference will be sponsored by the Advertising Women of New York on February 21st; and a fashion show and card party in the Bellevue-Stratford ballroom on February 29th, at 1.45 p. m. The latter will benefit the Lankenau Cancer Research Scholarship Fund and Women's Medical College of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Frank Lehman is in charge of ticket sales here for the fashion show. A card party will be conducted on Monday evening in the club home, this being brought to attention of the club women by Mrs. Walter Fagan. An executive committee meeting is arranged for next Thursday at eight p. m.; and chorus practice on February 23rd, just prior to the club session.

ON THE SCREENS

RITZ THEATRE

Moviegoers who dare moviemakers to thrill them and at the same time amuse them will meet the cinematic answer to challenge in Paramount's "The Cat and the Canary," co-starring Bob Hope and lovely Paulette Goddard, which opens at the Ritz Theatre.

Gary Cooper is playing an American army doctor in "The Real Glory," which is currently on view at the Ritz Theatre.

He talks seldom and then in whispers, but once he gets wound up he'll discuss—and intelligently, too—anything from taxes to hunting, with emphasis on the hunting.

GRAND THEATRE

When Norman McLeod collaborated with Corey Ford in writing "Remember," romantic comedy starring Robert Taylor and Greer Garson, with Lew Ayres, which opens today at the Grand Theatre, they selected New York as the most appropriate setting for their story of modern married life.

Suspense, thrilling gun-fights, hand-to-hand combats, comedy, tragedy and a tender romance are interwoven in "The Marshal of Mesa City," George O'Brien's new outdoor movie, during the days of the early West, which shows at the Grand today.

Boris Karloff is reported to have succumbed to the teeth-chattering potentialities of his late role, that of "Mord," the executioner, in Universal's "Tower of London," which opens Sunday at the Grand Theatre, with Karloff acting as chief ally of Richard III, a part played by Basil Rathbone.

BRISTOL THEATRE

Inspired originally by the phenomenally successful song from which it derives its title, "South of the Border," which opened yesterday at the Bristol Theatre for a two-day run, now promises to become as popular as the song itself.

A race-horse with a weakness for alcoholic beverages is the unique role played by "Prince Albert," trained equine, in Joe Penner's latest film, "The Day the Bookies Wept," starting tomorrow at Bristol.

"Our Neighbors—the Carters", which will have its first local showing on Sunday at the Bristol Theatre.

HIGH SCHOOL FIVE ADVANCES STEP CLOSER TO TITLE

Exhibiting Brilliant Brand of

Team Has Easy Time

WINNING SCORE, 37 TO 14

Cards Set Dazzling Pace and Roll Up 23-Point
Margin

TRENTON, Feb. 10.—Exhibiting a brilliant brand of ball, coach Tom Campion's Cardinal and Gray court quintet successfully warded off the challenge of the second-place Fallsington Falcons and thereby advanced another step toward their second straight Lower Bucks league title.

The Cards set a dazzling pace to roll up a 23 point margin, winning by a 37-14 count. As a result of the triumph Bristol now has only to defeat Bensalem Owls to achieve their goal and the championship. At the same time the defeat for the Falcons dropped them out of a second place tie with the Morrisville Bulldogs into third place in the loop standings. But worse yet than that is the fact that the setback eliminated the Orange and Black five from all possible chances of gaining a tie with the champions which they had high hopes of accomplishing.

After the initial period, the end of which Bristol led by a 9-3 score, there was never any doubt as to the final outcome of the tilt. By halftime that lead was extended to 18-5 and consequently the Falcons, trailing by such a wide margin, were definitely out of the ball game. Most of the 300 fans who watched the tussle were disappointed with the ease by which the Cardinals whipped the club which was expected to give them the most trouble in the battle for the crown this season. They had anticipated a fast but close game all the way.

However, Bristol, in triumphing the way they did, left no doubt in the

Rinso Licks A "Hard" Opponent in Battle Here

Worked up into a furious, fighting lather, and thrilling Bristol housewives with a two-listed demonstration of fast action and top-speed efficiency, Rinso today emerged an easy victor over that local bully, hard water.

The decision was unanimously given by scores of local women who have been purchasing the new 1940 Rinso at bargain prices during the Rinso "No Scrub" special featured by Bristol merchants.

In Bristol, as in hard-water areas all over America, women are hurrying to stores that spotlight the Rinso "No Scrub" special, in order to acquaint themselves with the marvelous new soap that licks hard water. Buying it at economical prices, they report that it not only overcomes the hard-water problem but that it also produces snowy washes many times whiter than lazy, old-time bar and package soaps.
